Canada's Markets: As Smooth as Their Maple Syrup

The saying goes something like, "When the United States gets a cold, the world gets pneumonia," or when we sneeze the world gets a cold, etc., though that theory is out there a number of different ways. However, Canada has seemed to do something spectacular in the past couple of years – stay healthy while the rest of the world got sick.

Video: Signs of hope in U.S. housing market

Coldwell Banker realtor Frances Rosado says she is seeing more buying interest in her area including Clifton, New Jersey, but sellers are having to do more to clinch the deal, as national data hint at the beginning of the end of the housing slump

Toronto home sellers are in a January state of mind

Why do people list their houses and condos for sale in the depths of January? One good reason is that they're trying to sell on a busy street. Canny agents will advise listing such a property during the coldest time of the year because buyers are less likely to open the windows and hear the streetcar rumbling by or noise from cars whizzing along the highway.

Will your roof crack under pressure?

Whether it snows or not, we probably have about 2½ more months of this winter wonderland. Maybe three, depending on where you live. And even though Jack Frost was a slow starter this year, he always means business when he gets going. Some people might think a mild winter is easier on a home than extreme cold weather and lots of snow. But the truth is that both have their risks.

Hot chocolate, cold employees at new Square

Good news first: the ice at Nathan Phillips Square is sublime. I went for a morning skate, and have never seen the city's most visible pad of frozen water so hard and smooth. The city had planned to replace the under-ice coolant pipes this past year, but ran out of time, so workers placed a "flexible refrigeration mat" in the basin and covered it with sand. Quite by accident, we have better ice than ever before.

Coldwell Banker Feltrim Launches Florida Buying Program for Canadians

Coldwell Banker Feltrim stays ahead of the real estate trends focusing on the international market. The most recent real estate market movement is the popularity of cheap, yes, cheap Florida properties for Canadian investors. Properties that are being scooped up by investors are heavily discounted and are viewed as a long term holds.

Ready for recreation home ownership? Work through the details first

Good recreation home destinations have plenty of appeal for Albertans. More than a handful take inspiration from our cold winters to find just the right spot. But before the emotions kick in - and before signing on the dotted line - there are some points that need to be thought out, says Sotheby's International Realty Canada.
