Higher conference attendance indicates interest in Saskatchewan's commercial real estate

Many come from out of province, even out of country, to Regina conference

An annual conference to attract commercial real estate investment is becoming increasingly popular, explains Richard Jankowski with Avison Young.

"Twenty per cent of the crowd is outside of Regina or the region or the province or the country. So it's an indication of what's happening here and they want to be part of it," said Jankowski, the managing director of the local Avison Young office.

He says since they launched an annual commercial real estate conference four years ago attendance has doubled

"When we started we had 120 people show up and it was really most a lot of people we were directly engaged with. It's gone from that to 230 people. The room is sold out."
